CHAPTER III

More important than the physical aspect of the place, however, was the air of tension which seemed to pervade the town. Even from the top of a stagecoach it was possible to sense the tight feeling of dread which seemed to be shared by the town's citizens.

A dozen riders were on hand at the hotel to shout questions at the braying Pety, but the little driver ignored them, addressing himself with some dignity to a young fellow who appeared at the door of the establishment.

"Better get Carson, Ed," he greeted. "We was held up. Got a dead man inside."

The announcement created a stir, of course, but Frazer was particularly interested in the reaction of the man in the doorway. He was a reasonably handsome fellow in his middle twenties, sandy haired and smooth shaven. A gun hung at his right hip while a small badge on his left-hand pocket of his flannel shirt explained why he was the only man in sight thus armed.

He had jumped guiltily as he glanced up at the coach, and now his face was flushed. He exhaled hard, tipped his hat to Miss Bartlett, and swung away almost at a run. "I'll get the marshal," he said over his shoulder.

Frazer took his position beside the girl, ready to clear a path through the crowd, but she shook her head as she divined his intention. "Well, we have to wait here until we see Marshal Emery," she murmured. "Delaplaine will be back with him in a moment. The saloon is just there beyond that first saloon."

Pety Informs Crowd Of Robbery and Killing

The marshal was not the first one to interrupt the excited murmur of the crowd. A boy had forced his way toward the coach, something about him demanding consideration from the curiosity seekers. Frazer saw him coming and frowned quickly. Here was a man who could be troublesome, not merely because of his size but because of the unchecked emotion which revealed themselves so plainly. The red, excited face betrayed an unstable temper while the flaming dark eyes were those of a zealot.

His words were addressed to Helen Bartlett. "What are you doing back so soon?" There was almost a snarl in the question.

His glance at the dead man took only a scant minute. Then he backed out into the street again, his crisp order directed at Deputy Delaplaine. "Find Doc McGee," he ordered. "Tell him to get this fellow."

Emery came over toward Frazer. "You the gent was on the stage today?" he asked, his face saying nothing.

"I'm the one. Is that the way you people always welcome strangers in this part of the country?" he asked, his face saying nothing.

Marshal Emery Calls Conference in Office

Emery did not reply to the question. He simply nodded curtly toward the saloon building which housed his office, and the town jail. Better come along and tell me what you saw. He was a little more than a mile from the saloon when he saw the marshal. He was a little more than a mile from the saloon when he saw the marshal.

A man came down the street toward them and Frazer stopped in a quick alarm. He managed to stumble into Emery just long enough to whisper, "Look at the fellow coming down the street from the east. Don't say anything. Just give him a good look."

The remark was a spur-of-the-moment inspiration, but his effect was noteworthy. The Marshal nodded his head and the town jail. Better come along and tell me what you saw. He was a little more than a mile from the saloon when he saw the marshal.

Frazer shrugged, content with the show of results. "You couldn't move it by me, mister. Maybe I ain't even right in taggin' this fellow as a lawman. I only had a hunch I'd seen him somewhere before."

"Sure. But what good could that do? The camp had a mask over his face all the time. I couldn't recognize him again if I fell down over him."

"You are a lucky again," Emery said. "The very little Mexican said so. It's not good to know too much. When the odd pair left him Frazer had a new thought to occupy his mind. He felt sure that neither of these men had participated in the holdup. Still, they were anxious about it. They wanted to know more about the details."

He went over to the deserted coach to get his bag and saddle, and it occurred to him that maybe they had not been seeking information after all. Perhaps they were merely concerned about how much other people knew. One way or another, he was glad he had fed them that bit about the dead man having been an officer.

The Mesa Verde hotel boasted a tiny lobby between its dingy dining room and its rather more ornate bar. The whole was unimpressive when Frazer entered, so he stood sharply on a nickel-plated sill which stood beside a battered wooden door. The summons brought a response in the person of a red-haired girl whose apron presented a new problem. She wore earrings, makeup and a diamond apron. That didn't make sense to Frazer. The apron was no frontier's universal symbol of domestic respectability, whereas earrings and rouge were almost certain signboards pointing in the opposite direction.

The girl gave him a quick little smile that was contradictory at first, but then became a grin.

Mostly about GUN DOGS

Coon hunting is gaining in popularity in many sections of the country and coonhound field trials are being staged on almost as large a scale as national ones.

Most popular dogs among coon hunters are the Black and Tan, Bluebelly, Redbone and Treeing Walker.

Highlight of most coon hunts is the "session around the campfire." The thrill of listening for the baying of the hounds as the fire crackles brightly while the coonhound is a never-ending saga of the sportsman and his dog.

Barry, president of the Company, was received by C. T. Hunter, division vice president, on behalf of the employees.

The Southeast Division, with headquarters in Pensacola, has 165 employees serving 28,300 customers. Use of electricity in the homes of Southeast Alabama is among the highest on the Company's system, reaching nearly 2,700 kilowatt-hours for the year ending in April of this year, which is approximately 15 percent greater than the average use of all customers served.

Mr. Barry, speaking of the Company's expansion and improvement program as related to Alabama's development, invited attention to the fact that expenditures had been made in Southeast Alabama for enlargements to, and improvements in, power supply facilities. Last year a high capacity 110,000 volt line was completed between Montgomery and Union Springs, thereby providing an entire new way and duplicate source of supply to Southeast Alabama. A new 110,000 volt substation was also completed at Webb, and early this year a similar substation was completed at Slocumb. At present another 110,000 volt line is under construction between Eufaula and Webb. In addition, various lines have been restructured with larger conductors. Also, there have been many other improvements designed to increase our already good service in the area.

"We recognize the fact that this is one of the fast growing areas for which the future holds much promise," said Mr. Barry. "We look upon the future development of Alabama with the greatest optimism. Important as have been the agricultural and industrial development during the past decade, we believe them to be but a small indication of the development which can take place. We are showing our faith in the future by making permanent improvements to our plan which amount to more than 30 million dollars in the next three years."

Mr. Barry stated that in addition to the diversified industries already operating in Alabama, others which have shown an interest in locating in our State are chemical, paper, newsprint, lamps, metal work, food products, synthetic yarns, clothing, hosiery, knit goods, non-ferrous metals, glass products, roofing, hardware, electrical equipment and farm machinery. He also emphasized that for many sections of Alabama, agriculture will continue to be the chief industry, improving in practice as time goes on.

power supply facilities. Last year a high capacity 110,000 volt line was completed between Montgomery and Union Springs, thereby providing an entire new way and duplicate source of supply to Southeast Alabama. A new 110,000 volt substation was also completed at Webb, and early this year a similar substation was completed at Slocumb. At present another 110,000 volt line is under construction between Eufaula and Webb. In addition, various lines have been restructured with larger conductors. Also, there have been many other improvements designed to increase our already good service in the area.

"We recognize the fact that this is one of the fast growing areas for which the future holds much promise," said Mr. Barry. "We look upon the future development of Alabama with the greatest optimism. Important as have been the agricultural and industrial development during the past decade, we believe them to be but a small indication of the development which can take place. We are showing our faith in the future by making permanent improvements to our plan which amount to more than 30 million dollars in the next three years."

the U. S. S. Astoria in commission and served aboard it for 21 months, participating in the liberation of the Philippine Islands and in the capture of such famous war spots as Iwo Jima, Okinawa, Leyte, and Luzon. His ship took part in the air strikes against Tokyo, Northern Honshu, Kobe and a great number of other strategic Japanese areas, and engaged the enemy's ships in the waters surrounding Japan.

Lt. Rhodes holds the following decorations: Good Conduct Medal with three bronze stars; American Defense Medal with one bronze star; Asiatic-Pacific Theatre Medal with five bronze stars; World War II Victory Medal; Chinese Occupation Medal; Philippine Liberation Medal with one bronze star.

Aside from his war travels, the lieutenant's journeys have been shared by his family, which has twice been evacuated from war zones. His wife is the former Miss Gledie Rowe of Elba, and they have three children: Melba Ann, Clarence, Jr., and William Donald.

William Donald, the youngest, was born in Guam, Marianas Island, where Lt. Rhodes was attached to the Naval Station from 1936 to 1939. His family returned to Elba, Ala., on December 7, 1941. Mrs. Rhodes and the children were evacuated to the United States on East-bound ship, the S. S. Elba, on Sunday, 1942.

After the war the much-traveled naval officer saw stateside duty until 1948, when he went to Shanghai, China, where he remained until 1950. He was then assigned to the United States.

The lieutenant and his wife maintain a permanent home in Washington, a suburb of Pensacola, Fla., but Mrs. Rhodes and the three children are now in Alaska.

reached his home. I knew I'd never be able to find my way back to town. He lived at least ten miles from the trail that led to the main road. When ever he saw a car coming, he knew it was the mail carrier or a collector from Sears-Roebuck.

The very first day on my new job, my boss put me plowing in new ground. The plow handle would strike me in the side and I'd holler with pain, but Mama couldn't hear me. It seemed like my little boys, who were in the field with broom straw swilling, would never last until dark, but they finally made it. Boy, I was tired. I wanted to ride the old grey mule to the house, but I was too tired to get on.

I just hobbled to the house, and that night I took the old kerosene lamp and proceeded to the wood shed where a weak light from a kerosene lamp was waiting for me. After scrubbing the dirt off my exhausted body I went to bed. After morning wash and several huddles over to the other side of the room, I went to bed. ## About People and Things

By C. B. McDowell

COFFEE COUNTY WINDBAG

By Fred S. Watson

Sunday morning was always a busy time around our house when I was a little boy. We were all out of bed as early as usual, hurrying around the house getting ready to go to church.

Mama always believed in us children going to church. My brother and I would get the old tub full of water and get in the corn crib, where we would take turns scrubbing each other's backs. We weren't able to buy store soap, so Mama would make that old lye soap. It would really bring the dirt and the hide too.

If you didn't wait it, you didn't wait it.

But then George Collier told his tale of woe. One George Collier, Jr., did get married. The paper it was carried as plain George Collier. It seems a very important fact, friend, Dorsey Trailer's George Collier saw the news item and interpreted it to mean he and one only had "married up." A very hot telegram sizzled over the wires to Elba and landed in George's hands. He hefted it, that chicken, hoping he'd save me a wing anyway. Guess that's one of the reasons I was always crazy about the Air Corps.

No matter how tough the going was, Mama always found the one actually married. Young line to teach, she was the friend and your editor has learned, greatest inspiration that I ever had, and if it had not been for newspapering. That is, to get the full name of anybody you write about.

DEAD LAKES FISHING Luke English reports catching his limit at Dead Lakes in Florida last week on Wednesday and Thursday. He said they were small and he was worried about the future of fishing in that area if they didn't get some more water soon. This year he spanned their eggs in shallow water that later receded and the eggs high and dry, he depression. She did her housework and went to the field with us and worked day in and day out. The Mothers of Years ago, who were the sunbonnets and bore their hardships and suffering with a smile can never be replaced, and in the end, they were the ones who were the heart of those who are fortunate to have Mother to love for all her kindness.
